

Village Life Part Two

Food wasn't plentiful. You had to go on the butter train to Bundoran or some place to get the butter and sugar. You had a ration book for clothes. I was married during the war and you applied to the authorities and they gave you so many more coupons to get some more clothes. That was the first of the people from the village moving away to Clontoe and Limavady and these places to work for the Ministry. That was more or less the break up of the work in the village then shortly after that the soap works closed the farm yards closed and the Brown's they died out. There was very few people living in the village working in the village
